Devotional Thought on FRIENDSHIP

One of the finest examples of male friendship is found in the historical record of 1 Samuel. Here we read about real male friendship, about a relationship that ran deep between Jonathan, the king's son, and David, a shepherd boy and God's future choice for the throne. Their friendship was strong, built solidly on an inward attachment rather than on an outer attraction or social status. These men demonstrated a mutual acceptance of each other despite their different social backgrounds. David's interests were more important to Jonathan than his own, and David felt the same way about Jonathan's interests.

If you study the friendship between David and Jonathan, you will walk away with a good understanding of what a healthy friendship between men can and should be. Any definition should include the following:

- Unconditional love
- Personal Enjoyment
- Mutual acceptance
- Mutual interests
- Mutual commitment
- Mutual loyalty

In short, friendship involves a concern for and involvement with the well-being of another.
