What is Communication? The Scholastic Dictionary of American English defines communication as "the exchange of information, ideas, etc; a passing on; a transmitting.

1) How do you communicate? We ask this to them, see what they say.

2) Does body language help convey the message you're trying to send across? How does it do this?

TELEPHONE GAME: At this point we divide the group in half, depending on how large the group is.

3) Communication breakdown: can a message be distorted when communicating? How?

What about when people cannot talk to convey messages, or are blind, preventing them from being able to see messages?

BLIND-MUTE RELAY RACE: We divide the group again into three or four teams, based on numbers. Two people one blind, one mute. The mute must guide the blind through a small obstacle course (of chairs!), and when the end is reached, they reverse jobs and head back.

Small groups: Does communication vary depending on who you're trying to communicate with? Family, friends, teachers, coaches, bosses, coworkers (for those with jobs), other members of the group.

Skits: The small groups are all to perform a skit. Each one will be using a different type of communication: body, normal, spoken word (with no expression), internet lingo. Each skit will be briefly discussed after performance.
