Tona Herndon was mugged by a male attacker while visiting the grave of her recently buried husband of 60 years.

That day, 15-year-old Christian Lunsford was watching television when he saw his estranged father's image appear on the screen as the man who robbed Tona. Christian immediately recognized his dad and felt obligated to do what could be done to make things right.

So he phoned Tona and asked if he could meet her in a church parking lot. There, he apologized to the 78-year-old widow on behalf of his father. Christian went on to surprise Tona, giving her the $250 his father had sent him for band camp. He was not sure how his father came across the $250, so he told Tona that he'd feel bad if he couldn't make up for her loss.

Tona accepted the money from the teenager, paused, then gave it right back to him with this: "I want you to take your band trip."
