

■ TRUTH IN LENDING

Brian read, “I declare, to the best of my knowledge, that the information contained herein is true.”

The statement jumped off the page at him. He had filled out his financial aid form for college, and now he needed to sign it. In his opinion, he hadn’t really lied—he had only reduced the amount of money he actually had in the bank. Brian’s parents both had good jobs, but they didn’t make enough money to pay for Brian’s college expenses. He would need all the financial help he could get.
