ANGER LEADS TO CONFLICT

People handle anger in different ways, based on their needs, perceptions, resources, and values. It is often difficult to make satisfactory decisions relating to a situation that makes you angry. Your emotion may seem to be out of control, and you may act or strike out in an unsatisfactory manner, rather than think of alternative ways to express your anger in a more positive manner.

I.	Directions:	Study the diagram	below, and	explain its n	neaning in	the space provided	l.
----	-------------	-------------------	------------	---------------	------------	--------------------	----

	ANGER-PROVOKING EMOTIONS	CONFLICT -	METHOD USED <
	SITUATION		1
	YOUR ANGER	HOW TO HANDLE 🛉	VIOLENT OR NON-VIOLENT
	The second secon	c
	€5 rgg p
II:	List some anger-provoking situations, and methods githem.	enerally used by you ar	nd/or others to resolve
	Situations	Methods Generally Used
	1.	 	e .
	2.	ä
	3:	4	:
III	A. How would you handle the following anger-pro	voking situations? Writ	e your answers on the back of this sheet.		-, y, o sa_ sa_ o sa_ o sa_ o sa_
	1. The teacher insults you in front of your classmates.
	 Someone stole your notebook. You are deliberately "tripped" in the hall 		- · · ·
	4. Your father won't lend you the car for you
	5. Your school lost the deciding game of the season.
. " 1 1 2 2 -	6. A classmate just "put you down" in front 7: Your boss accused you of "goofing off" or

- B. Use the back of this sheet to answer the following questions, relating to the above situations.
 - 1. What needs were not being met by the wronged or injured party?
 - 2. How would perception, resources, and values affect an individual's response to an anger-provoking situation (the manner an individual handles his or her anger)?
- IV: Keep a log of some situations that provoked your anger in the last day or two, and tell how you handled each incident. Analyze each situation for motive and intent.