

■ STRETCHING THE TRUTH

Kim's parents believed her again when she told them she didn't know she was an hour late. They trusted her. Kim didn't think it was her fault that she had to stretch the truth so often. She believed she wouldn't have to do it at all if her parents weren't so strict. Her curfew was just too early. All of her friends were allowed to stay out much later. Kim had tried talking to her parents several times, but they didn't seem to listen.
