

Understanding
of one's new physical existence begins as experience feeds knowledge and growth continues.

One's knowledge comes from the incorporation of information:
a mixture or blend of truths (facts)
and illusions (perceptions).
Observation and comprehension of information

yield thoughts--self-created illusions-- which combine to form perceptions.

When once formed,
perceptions
strive to make understanding of one's state of being,
one's reality,
but only paint reality through illusion.

True reality is the intersection of a point in time and space.
Conscious reality,
or striving to make understanding of
true reality,
is one's interpretation of the intersection
based upon the cognizance of energy and matter displacement, that lies within the limits and bounds of the three dimensions.
Conscious reality is striving to see,
or perceive,
things as they truly are without passing judgements, without masking with desire or ego motivations.

Conscious reality
is conscious creation based upon one's observation,
and whatever is left after the dissolution
of illusion.

Desire,
is one's willingness to accept or produce change.
Obstacles
are those which keep one closed to knowing the solutions.
Obstacles stunt growth,
and are only overcome by desire.
When one desires to control obstacles-- self-created illusions
and ego-based perceptions-- one becomes open.

When one desires to control
other people and events,
one becomes closed, restricted, separate--
isolated and imprisoned in illusion.
Growth is incomplete.

When both awareness and understanding combine,
realization occurs.
Realization in action,
then leads to actualization, leads to living a life of
happiness,
peace,
celebration,
leads to manifesting purpose,
manifesting love,
until purpose is served
and death,
our relentless path finder,
returns us
home.

Life is a sequence--
a series of saying
"Hello" and "Good-bye"
to all people,
to all things.

LIFE

Life is a dynamic process of discovery and learning, by form, through function and participation, to fulfill spiritual purpose by choice.

Formerly a spirit without form, one comes to discover, to experience, to gather wisdom from information.

A gift of Spiritual Energy made visible, a human stems from the Creative force of the universe and manifests as a product or extension of the Creator's Love, by transforming from pure energy into matter: energy manifested or made detectable.

Form follows process. Therefore, spiritual process, or manifestation, conceives, transitions energy into matter, into form.

Conception, or spiritual process of energy manifesting form, is a transformation of energy into being human. All forms necessarily have boundaries. Therefore, a human being is a living boundary or interface between the physical and spiritual worlds--other dimensions.

Independence is ephemeral, and cannot be forever sustained by choice. However, unity prevails independent of choice.

Growth is manifestation. To grow, is to risk and accept consequence. Things do not grow without unity-- without energy, without receiving, without acceptance, without other forms.

Never self-sufficient, never totally separate, form grows by dependence upon other forms to complete its form in order to function. Form achieves full physical stature in accordance with balance, when reaching full capacity and ability to function.

Rate of growth is governed by divine prescription. Form grows in accordance with divine synchronization. Maturity comes when full potential is reached. During the process of growth, experience allows for corrections and adjustments in order to further growth, complete form.

When experience is denied by no desire, and corrections and adjustments not made, growth is stunted or irregular. Prompted by desire, one grows, develops, and is motivated.
