For this quick icebreaker, divide your teenagers into groups of five or six. Then give them two minutes to learn as many random facts as they can about their other group members. At the end of two minutes, have them get together with an adult leader and recite as many facts as they can in one minute. For each thing they come up with, they get to roll a die, and the group with the most points at the end wins. If you don't like the randomness of the die roll, you can just have the group that can recite the most facts win.
