

TWITTER TO THE FUTURE

Here's a creative way to get kids thinking outside the box, even though they're confined to a 140-character box.

Have teenagers imagine they're able to travel in time—and their cell phones get to come with them. Have them create Twitter posts from the future or the past—it would be cool if you could post these onto a big screen in real-time.

- Tweet after you've met a historical figure—include something about inadvertently changing history for better or for worse.
- Tweet after being a part of your favorite Bible story.
- Tweet while being present at one of Jesus' miracles.
- Tweet after meeting your 3rd-grade self.
- Tweet after meeting your 40-year-old self.

The possibilities are endless.