

Married life

When you marry a woman, you give up your life and make a new life with your wife. It's been said that every wedding is a funeral. Two separate lives die so that a new creation of a married life together can be born.

Never, never marry a woman who does not know God. She will expect you to be God; looking for you to fill the whole inside that only God was meant to fill. If your wife is looking for you to be god in her life, you will surely fail. He is perfect you are not.

Likewise never marry a woman to make yourself feel complete. Only God can do that. Every woman will fall short. This simple advice if followed can save you great heartache.

You and Jesus are enough to take care of your needs. You don't marry someone so they will take care of you. Taking care of each other is something that people who commit to each other for life do. This is different from expecting your wife to be like your mother was when you were young.

When you don't have a mature sense of the purpose, meaning, or value of marriage, you'll realize too late that you've married the wrong woman for the wrong reasons and feel helpless to fix it. Marrying at too young an age is a big mistake. Don't marry anyone you are not willing to give our whole self to; and spend the rest of your life with.

Never stop courting your wife; letting her know how much she means to you. Women need and want to feel special, valued, and cherished. Marriage is not the time to sit back and think you did all you needed to to get a wife. Do not live as though you were still single and think that your "mommy-wife" will take care of everything for you.
